MONEY FACTS

THE U.S. MINT IS ALL ABOUT HELPING MOTHER NATURE.

Whenever it can, the U.S. mint recycles any old, worn coins it can get its hands on, using them to make new coins. Worn out bills are recycled, too, but not necessarily into new bills—they can be put into everything from roof shingles to fireplace logs once shredded. This practice is financially smart, as it keeps the mint from needing to spend a lot to get new materials. Maybe the shingles on your house came from recycled dollar bills?!
